

Astronomical Cycles and Human Affairs

A theory is set forth in this book which suggests that there is a relationship between events upon this earth and certain, if not all, astronomical cycles, namely the time periods between alignments of the planets in whatever geometric configurations. It suggests that such a relationship is caused by concomitant periodic disruptions of the interplanetary electromagnetic fields. The views expressed therein rely heavily upon the views of Nicola Tesla, who suggested the planets were electrically charged bodies, as well as Velikovskys subsequent ideas that possibly electrical discharges between the planets had occurred in historically recent times, and finally, a subsequent article in a technical magazine attempting to relate the disruption of radio communications on earth with planetary alignments. The book suggests that if the thesis that the planets are electrically charged bodies is correct, then their constantly changing positions in the solar system give rise to a fluctuating spatial environment of the static and other electrical fields enveloping the earth, an environment so complex in its variation that it seems to be a random process, and that events upon earth, correspondingly seemingly random in process but in actuality not, are actually influenced by the variations in the earths electromagnetic environment.
