

I Miss God and Other Poems

The world is filled with the splendor of God, Hopkins wrote. The poems in this short book celebrate Gods presence in the world and in ourselves. I wrote most of them when I was a none, meaning someone who did not go to church. I was spiritual but not religious. I longed for a Christian community, but I could not find one I could connect to. Finally, I did, less than three years ago. I hope people who are not Christians or who are--and who are not members of religious institutions get what I have put into words.
