Upon arriving he begins to become a part of the life in the past of London and reunites with his old friend there. The story proceeds to see him settled, and developing a mindset capable of a fresh life there. He is confronted by a few flashbacks to his old life, but put the experiences off to the stress of the move. He encounters a woman, in the course of his life that is almost a double for his dead wife from the future. He is challenged to keep interference with events in his new time to a minimum, and is slowly becoming settled into the lifestyle he has chosen. The story is brought again to the conclusion by a deranged man from the past discovering the truth, and his inability to deal with it, results in his travel to the future, and the entire operation becoming endangered. The main character has to act quickly to prevent a major paradox from occurring. How would you repair the current life that you live and see as a failure? Would you travel to a different reality to escape depression and boredom? Or, could you adapt to life in a past world easily? The story raises questions about the ability to interact with the past, without jeopardising the entire future. It allows a reader to step into the role of time traveller.
