

Review of Agricultural Policies: Estonia

This study, which covers the period from 1986-1995, describes the pre-reform situation in Estonia and the transition to a more market-oriented agro-food sector. It provides extensive background data, as well as calculations of the level of assistance to the main agricultural commodities as measured by Producer and Consumer Subsidy Equivalents. The study concludes that Estonia applies a very liberal agricultural regime. However, the report recommends that Estonia speed up the land reform process and the restructuring of its processing industries. It also cautions against the use of distortive price support policies to deal with problems related to low incomes and social hardship in rural areas. Rather, it recommends that Estonia address these problems in the framework of rural development programs.
